SOUTH KENTUCKIAN
CHAS. M. MCACHAM, ----- Editor.
HOPKINSVILLE, OCT. 9, 1883.

Judge Headley resumed the cause in Ohio Monday.

Girls be patient. It is less than three months till leap year.

Speaking of cannibals reminds us that Adam's son's were Cain-Abels.

Phil. B. Thompson will be a candidate for re-election to Congress in the Eighth-District.

The Sentinel, of Henderson, issued a very creditable daily during the Fair last week.

Frederick O. Prince, Major of Histon, has declined the Democratic nomination for Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts.

The Democrats have a first rate chance to elect their nominee for Governor in Iowa. Several Republican orators have been sent to the rescue.

Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock is very ill. It is said that his health has been wrecked by brooding over his defeat for the Presidency in 1880.

A pumpkin as big as a door barrel is attracting attention in Kenton county. It should be utilized. It would make a good head for the business man who doesn't advertise.

The cotton crop in Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana will be cut short by the recent drought at least one half and not more than half an average crop will be made in those states.

Gov. Cameron of Virginia, has boasted his office by taking the stump for Malone's friends. He refuses to divide time with the Democratic speakers, who are anxious to meet him in debate.

The greatest political battle of the year is being fought in Ohio to-day. Both sides are claiming the victory. Should the Democrats win it will be a victory, but should they lose it will not be a defeat, as Ohio is a Republican State.

President Arthur's life-size portrait has just been hung up in the White House among those of his predecessors excepting President Buchanan. The absence of the last Democratic President's picture is not explained.

According to the latest ruling persons who subscribe for a paper, one year cannot be forced to pay for a longer time unless they order the paper continued, even though they may take it regularly from the Post-office.

Col. Geo. Knott, proprietor of the St. Louis Republic, died on his way home from Europe on the 18th ult. He had been an invalid for some time. He leaves a fortune of half a million dollars.

An express car was boarded by three masked men, near Peru, Ind., on the 28th ult. and the messenger gagged and robbed of $1,500. The robbers then took the man in the car and quietly took their departure.

Twelve masked robbers went through a train at Coolidge, Kansas, last Friday, killed John Hilton the engineer, who refused to stop, wounded the fireman and express agent and robbed the train. The attack was very sudden. The train men made a gallant fight but had to succumb.

The King of Spain was insulted by a mob in the streets of Paris, France, last week and the President of the French Republic called upon King Alfonso and offered a formal apology and tendered him a banquet. The apology and invitation were accepted by the young monarch. The affair created a sensation in Europe.

The Post-office department has ruled that when a publisher sends a newspaper to a person, without an implied or expressed request, the fact that the party addressed takes the paper from the post-office does not of itself create a liability to pay for it. This is a good ruling and will stop unscrupulous publishers from sending their papers forever to persons who subscribe for one year only.

As will be seen in another column the feud between the Crumblough and the Stuarts factions of the Republican party at Owensboro has assumed a different phase and warrants of arrest against Maj. Crumblough have been issued by the United States authorities. Whether Maj. Crumblough will again emerge unharmed from his troubles remains to be seen.

Gov. Knott has declined to send a military guard to attend the execution of Craft at Grayson, next Friday. He has authorized the Sheriff to summon every citizen of the county, if necessary, to assist him in preserving order, and thereby fully demonstrate the capacity of the civil power to enforce the law and preserve the peace without recourse to the militia. His action in the matter was wise and proper.

A heavily-laden streetcar was struck by a passenger train in Philadelphia and knocked into smithereens, almost every passenger being more or less injured. Four were killed and several others were crippled for life. There was no conduct for the driver, who was driving to the right.

Our thanks are due Mr. Frank M. Shaver, the Secretary for a com-

Gen. Williams.

Interior Journal.

The Philadelphia Times has a Kentucky correspondent who seems to be resurrecting and revamping all the old jokes and stories that have been told to local politicians for the last century. One of his last publications is taken from the Sunday Argus of several years ago, and was written by Col. E. Polk Johnson, then its editor, from an actual occurrence which we related to him. The true version is as follows: Gen. Williams was stopping at the Myers House, Stanford, before his first election as U. S. Senator, and had invited a party to his room to partake of some liquid refreshments. He had imbibed pretty liberally himself, when Capt. Tom Richards, who was bugler in his regiment during the late unpeacefulness, having conceived the bad idea of serenading his old commander arrived in front of the hotel with the band. Thinking to awaken the memory of the General, he sounded the call for boots and saddles and repeated it over and again, but instead of its awakening memories, the old warrior, who had been kept ignorant of the compliment to him, turned to Col. W. and asked, What stage is that this time of night and what is the like makes the driver toot so much? The Colonel politely informed him who the tooter was and suggested that the party expected a speech from him. "H—," said the General and straightening himself up, he marched to the balcony above and commanded, his voice trembling with seeming emotion, I knew that bugle call the instant I heard it, and the memories of the past came crowding to my mind. Often have I heard it calling the old First Kentucky to field up or exultingly sounding the note of victory. [Cheers.] I would have known it even had I heard it in the pathless wilds of the West for no man under the sun can evoke such sweet notes from a bugle as can dear old Tom Richards, the bravest and the best man that ever went to battle. Long and loud cheered followed this and the effect was electrical till Col. W. unable to keep the true inwardness of the business longer related and vouches for its correctness, though he has never succeeded in masking the Captain believes that the general could thus dissimile. A shrewd politician or a keen demagogue may.

Now the question is, what are our thanks due Mr. Frank M. Davy, the Secretary, for a sum which was to be understood by up, and if his ways are dark, his tricks are never vain. One of them, and it never fails to take, is to get with some acquaintance and walk around a town. This is not for the purpose of being introduced but to get his friends to tell him before reaching a crowd, who is that fellow with the beaver on? The old chap with the spectacles? Or the young rooster with the moustache? Then he goes up to each of them by name, says something pleasant and it tickles the average man to death to think that the General remembers him so well. This kind of dealing has made the General exceedingly popular with masses, who are unable to see through the business, and he will always be a hard man to beat. He claims that he is as good as chosen as his own successor in the Senate but the prospects are that we will have no walk over even if his ambition is realized.

WILLIAM NYE.

Damon and Pythias were named after a popular secret organization because they were solid on each other. They thought more of one another than anybody. They borrowed chewing tobacco and were always sociable and pleasant. They slept together, and unitedly "stood off" the banditry from mouth to mouth in the most cheerful and harmonious manner. If Pythias snored in the night like the blast of a foghorn, Damon would not get mad and kick him in the stomach, as some would. He gently and firmly took him by the nose and lifted him up and down to the merry rhythm of "The Babies on our Block." They loved one another in season and out of season. Their affection was like the soft bloom on the nose of a Wyoming legislator. It never grew pale or withered: it was always there. If Damon went to a church fair and invited starvacious Pythias to go with him, and on the handsomest baby till the First National Bank of Syracuse would refuse to honor his checks. But one day Damon got into much bridge, and told the venerable and colossal old bummer of Syracuse what he thought of him. Then Damon told the chief engineer of the saw-mill to turn on the steam and prepare for business. But Damon thought of Pythias, and how Pythias hadn't so much to live for, as he had, and he made a compromise by promising to put Pythias in soak while the only genuine Damon went to see his girl, who lived in Albany. Three days were given him to get around and redeem Pythias, and if he failed his friend would have to go to prison.

We will now suppose three days have elapsed since the preceding chapter. A large party of enthusiastic citizens of Syracuse are gathered around the grand stand and Pythias is on the platform, cheerfully taking off his coat. Near by stands a man with a broadaxe. The Syracuse Silver Cornet band has just played "It's Funny When You Feel that Way," and the chaplain has made a long prayer, Pythias sliding a trifle dollar into his hand and whispering to him to give him his money's worth. The Declaration of Independence has been read, and the man on his left is running his thumb playfully over the edge of the meat-axe. Pythias takes off his collar and the, swearing softly to himself of his miserable luck. It is now the proper time to throw in the solitary horseman. The horizontal bars of golden light from the setting sun gleam and glitter from the dome of the court-house and bathe the green plains of Syracuse with golden splendor, the billowy piles of fezzy brocage in the eastern sky look soft and yielding, like a Sarah Bernhardt. The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea, and all nature seems possessed with solemn hush and stillness on the surrounding and engulphing horizon. The solitary horseman is seen coming along the Albany and Syracuse toll-road. He jabs the Mexican spurs into the foamy flanks of his noble Cayuse plug, and the lash of his whip as it moves through the air sings a merry song. Damon has been delayed by road agents and washouts, and he is a little behind time. Besides, he fooled a little too long, and dallied a little in Albany with his fair gazelle. But he is making time now, and he sells into the jail-yard just in time to take his part. He and Pythias fell into each other's arms, borrow a chew of fine-cut from each other and weep to slow music. Damon comes before the curtain, bows, and says the exercises will be postponed. He orders the band to play something soothing, gives Damon the appointment of Superintendent of Public Instruction and Pythias as the Syracuse post-office, and everything is lovely. Orchestra plays something touchful, curtain comes down. Keno!

Mischiefous Malaria. To say that malaria is mischiefous is to put it very mildly. It is all that and more. It is cunning, deceitful, treacherous, sly, and underhanded. It does its work in the dark, and in such a sly way that much of the mischief is done before it is discovered. It says the foundations of a healthy system. It robs the blood of its vitality, demoralizes the liver, confounds the stomach, and makes the victim wish he were in his grave. It is sad to see people sit down in their misery, to be the victims of mischiefous malaria, and thinking that nothing can be done for them. The power of Brown's Iron Bitters has been so amply proved that there is no reason why anybody who can procure a bottle of this Prince of Tonics shall suffer. Great is the power of malaria, and great are its disastrous effects. But greater far is the beneficial influence of Brown's Iron Bitters. The preparation of iron in this family remedy can be taken without ruining the teeth or producing any other害。

Now the question is, what are our thanks due Mr. Frank M. Davy, the Secretary, for a sum which was to be understood by
